BETWEEN BODIES

INTERNATIONAL PROJECT

WHY?

I am interested in creating spaces where artists from different backgrounds can meet without the pressure of having to arrive at the same language, method, or result.

Working in different countries such as Romania, Germany, and Italy has shown me how deeply conditioned actors can be by their training systems, often shaped by specific pedagogies, expectations, and hierarchies.

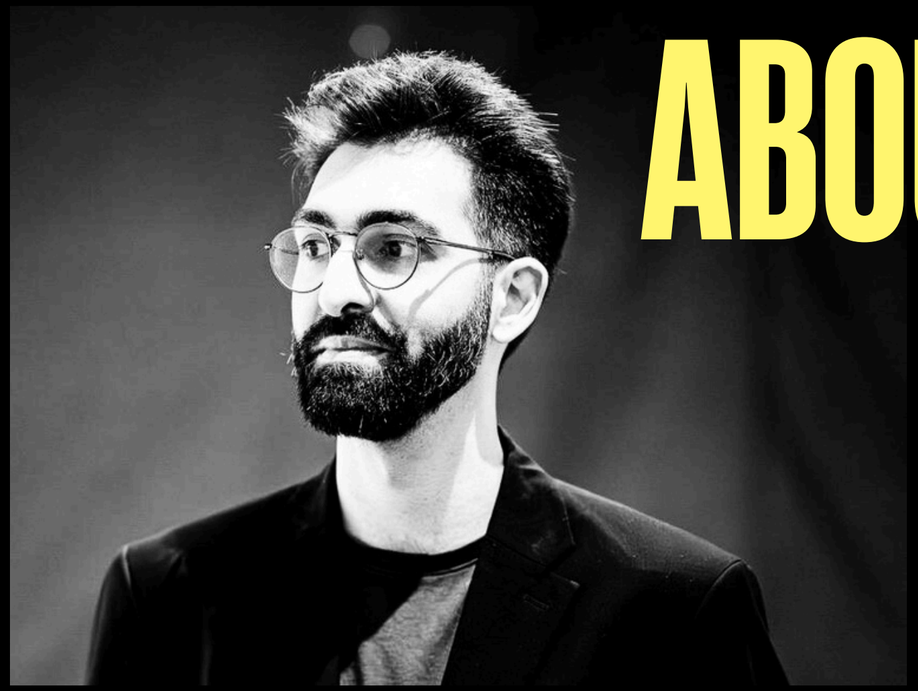
By moving between contexts, I am able to place these differences in dialogue and create a space where they can be questioned, softened, or temporarily suspended.

WHY?

These workshops are not about transmitting a fixed method, but about creating a shared space for exploration, one that invites participants to engage through direct experience rather than evaluation.

I am interested in what happens when performers step outside familiar structures and are not required to “perform well,” but simply to be present, listen, and respond. In this context, the body often becomes more available and new forms of expression can emerge.

Each city, group, and cultural context reshapes the process, allowing the work to be influenced by the people in the room. Ultimately, these workshops create temporary communities, spaces of trust and curiosity where artists can reconnect with a more instinctive way of working.



ABOUT ME AND HOW I DO IT

I am a theatre director and acting trainer with over 15 years of experience, working across institutional theatres, independent companies, and international collaborations, including with artists such as Declan Donnellan and Robert Wilson. My practice spans directing, teaching, and the development of original projects, with contributions to festivals, educational programs, and cultural initiatives.

My current work focuses on the relationship between the body, impulse, and direct experience. Rather than following a fixed method, I build processes that emerge from the encounter between people in the room, shifting the focus from analysis to presence, from performing well to responding to what is actually happening. Drawing on physical expression and somatic awareness, I create non-hierarchical environments where vulnerability is part of the work, habits are questioned, and instinct is given space to lead.

BODY MIND CONNECTION

This workshop focuses on the actor’s ability to recognize, regulate, and use bodily responses.
Through simple physical exercises, rule-based games, and focused attention practices, participants explore how the body reacts before conscious thought intervenes, and how this information can be transformed into clear, grounded stage actions.

ACQUIRED SKILLS

- Greater autonomy in working with different types of texts
- A clearer relationship between physical action, voice, and meaning
- Greater precision in timing, rhythm, and spatial awareness
- Confidence in generating meaning through process rather than through explanation

Rather than working toward predefined results, the workshop creates conditions in which presence, decision-making, and resilience can emerge organically. The process prioritizes awareness over performance, allowing participants to recognize habitual patterns such as tension, control, avoidance, or excessive effort, and to develop more effective and sustainable responses.
